The wealth of France and England is put down at $40,-000,000,000 each. The specie of France is reckoned at $700,000,000 and that of England at $400,000,000, while the paper circulation of the former is $252,000,000 and of the latter is $196,000,000. This gives to France a ratio of circulation to wealth of 2.38 and to England 1.49, or a volume of circulation per capita for the

The United States in 1882 had a circulation of specie and bank notes combined equal to $438,671,218, which in 1870 had swelled to $700,000,000, giving for the former year a volume of circulation per capita of $13 95 and for the latter year capité of $13 9 and for the latter years. $20.48, which was an exceedingly rapid increase. Previous to the year 1862 the greatest amount of bank circulation was in 1857, when it reached $214,778,000, and the largest aggregate of notes and specie was in 1859, when it reached what was then considered the corrowns sum of $207,844,000. Yet to day our legal tender paper circulation is 60 per cent greater than that of 1857, and our combined circulation of paper and silver money is $720,000,000, or $422,156,000 greater than the plethoric year of 1859, and $24,000,000 in excess of the total circulation in 1867. The $666,000,000 of money in circulation in the last named year, which was practically all paper, if we measure its value by the highest price of gold for that year, which was practically all paper, if we measure its value by the highest price of gold for that year, which was practically all paper, if we measure its value by the highest price of gold for that year, which was 1463, had but little more than half the purchasing-power of our present volume of combined silver and paper circulation. Add the increased purchasing-power of our present volume of our present direction to present direction to the present direction to the part of the present direction to the control of the present direction to the product of the product of the color of the product of $20 48, which was an exceedingly rapid raltar Island, so named from the simi larity of its outline to the grand guardia of the entrance to the Mediterranear ing power of our present circulation to its volume and we have for the year 1878 as compared with the year 1867, a money This was in former years the summer re-sort of Jay Cooke, and on it is a stately power equal to $1,000,000,000. Take the year 1873, in which we reached the intoxicating climax of our imaginary pros perity, "now lost to sight, but to m rapidly resolving itself to a state of ma ture, only that the sombre building of gray stone, its windows covered with ry dear," and measure the value of its currency by the highest price of gold (1162) and it gives an additional pureavy shutters and doors all closed an heavy shutters and doors at closed and locked, remains as the monument of pleasures past. This romantic taland is now a part of the assets upon which Cooke's creditors have a lien, and who will be its next owner, and what will next be done to add artificial splendor to its natural beauty, are questions for chasing power to the money of 1878 equal to one eighth of its volume; or, in other words, increases its volume as compared with the money of 1873, ninety millions with the money of 1873, ninety millions will be its next owner, and what will of dollars virtually giving us to day, by comparison, a circulation of $810,000,000. An important factor in these comparisons is the market price of commodities. The increased purchasing power of the honey of to day in the preceding figures is simply relative to the price of gold in the years mentioned (1807 and 1873) with the years mentioned (1807 and 1873) with the comparial values of commodities remaining the same. If we take into the calculation the reduction in the prices of commodities, the diminution of taxes and the vastly decreased public and private expenditures extending through the last twelve years, the ratios of the purchasing power of the money of 1878 as compared with that of 1867 and 1878, is of dollars; virtually giving us to day, by comparison, a circulation of $810,000,000. An important factor in these comparichasing power of the money of 1878 as compared with that of 1807 and 1878, is greatly augmented, and this, too, not-withstanding the shrieks and howls about contraction.
